FOREWORD

The Congressional Directory has been the official handbook for the Congress since 1821 and is also widely used by Federal agency officials and the general public. Historically, the book has been one of the most comprehensive and detailed resources for identifying the components of the three branches of the Federal Government. In this tradition, the Joint Committee on Printing is pleased to publish this edition for the 101st Congress.

A principal responsibility of the Joint Committee is to reduce, where possible, the printing costs of Government publications. We are pleased to note that, largely through the use of automated printing technology and diligent editorial revision, the cost of this publication has been reduced by over one-third from the prior edition.

The Joint Committee on Printing extends special thanks and appreciation to the offices of the Secretary of the Senate, the Sergeant at Arms, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and the Architect of the Capitol for their contributions.

[1] For many years the appointment or election of a President pro tempore was held by the Senate to be for the occasion only, so that more than one appear in several sessions and in others none was chosen. Since Mar. 12, 1890, they have served until "the Senate otherwise ordered."

JOINT MEETINGS AND SESSIONS OF CONGRESS

1st–101st CONGRESSES, 1789–1989 [1]

In the following table joint gatherings are listed by Congress, from the 1st through the beginning of the 101st. Only Congresses convening joint sessions or meetings are listed.

Joint sessions are more formal, and they occur upon the adoption by each house of a concurrent resolution. Joint meetings occur upon a unanimous consent agreement to recess to meet with the other legislative body.

In the earliest years of the Republic, joint gatherings were held in the Senate Chamber, but from 1797 to 1799 were held in the Hall of the House. When the Capital was moved to the District of Columbia in 1800, the Senate Chamber again was used for joint gatherings until 1809. Since that time, joint sessions and meetings have occurred in the Hall of the House.

In some instances more than one joint gathering have occurred on the same day. For example, on January 6, 1941, Congress met in joint session to count electoral votes for President and Vice President, and then met again in joint session to receive President Roosevelt's annual message.

Presidential messages on the state of the Union were known as "annual messages," but since the 80th Congress they have been known as "State of the Union Addresses."
